Mechanical Engineering Professor W.G. (Fred) Habashi has been given a high profile role in a new inter-university centre for supercomputing research funded by the Québec government, industry, and four Montréal-area teaching and research institutions.

Habashi will be the Industrial Relations Director for the Centre de recherche en calcul appliqué (CERCA). The director is Université de Montréal professor of physics, George Michaud.

CERCA was launched Jan. 14 at a Montréal news conference where Higher Education and Science Minister Lucienne Robillard announced $12.4 million in government funding for CERCA over the next six years. The Centre will carry out research in ap-

Bertrand announces details of five-year strategic space plan

As CTR went to press, an internal memorandum was being circulated by Vice-Rector Services Charles Bertrand concerning the five-year strategic space plan submitted to the Ministère de l'Enseignement supérieure et de la Science. The memorandum is reprinted below.

It is with pleasure that I announce that the University has submitted a five-year strategic space plan to the Ministère de l'Enseignement supérieure et de la Science (MESS), full details of which will be given in a forthcoming issue of CONCORDIA's Thursday Report.

The plan, designed in response both to the strategic space planning principles passed by Senate and the Board of Governors and to the consultation process that has been in place since March 1991, also takes into account a variety of important commitments:

a) As stipulated by the government, a number of major rental properties on the downtown campus have been

New Zealand takes first, Concordia best Québec team in first international MBA Case Competition

They came half-way around the world, and they conquered. The four-member team from the University of Otago, New Zealand, took top honours in the first Concordia International MBA Case Competition.

It was a fitting inauguration for the international version of the 10-year-old event. The five foreign teams brought a fresh, bold approach to the sport of case analysis, according to some of the judges. Twenty-four teams took part.

The winning team was presented with a cheque for $4,000 at a banquet held Saturday to close the five-day event. Georgetown University's team returned to Washington, D.C. with second prize ($3,000), and Memorial University and the University of Windsor won third

Double Cuff

With the recent spate of meningitis infections in Québec and in the Ottawa-regions, and the deaths of six youths in the province, parents of teenagers and children are understandably concerned. In the special two-part Off the Cuff, two Concordia health experts explain some of the dangers.

Job Guide

Teaching English as a Second Language is big business for some and a necessity for others. In Montréal, where no one takes language for granted, a recent fourth edition of TESL Professor Palmer Acheson's job guide is essential for those looking to teach English here or abroad.

Ross named dean

Christopher Ross has been appointed Dean of the Faculty of Commerce and Administration. His term begins immediately and runs until 31 January 1995. Board of Governors Chairman P. André Gervais made the announcement Wednesday morning just as CTR went to press. Gervais' complete statement will be published in next week's issue. Ross has been acting dean since August 1990.

Meningitis has become a household word

Off the Cuff is a weekly column of opinion and insight into major issues in the news. If you are a Concordia faculty member and have something to say "off the cuff," call CTR at 848-4882.

In this special two-part Off the Cuff column, two Concordia experts have been asked to quell some of the hysteria and misinformation circulating about meningitis, the deadly disease that has claimed the lives of six Québec youths.

In the past month, meningitis has become a household word and concern. A number of teenagers in Québec and in the Ottawa region have contracted the meningococcal infection, which attacks the brain and spinal cord. Provincial health officials insist there is no epidemic, but have ordered mass vaccinations as a precautionary measure.

Concordia Biology Professor Claire Cupples teaches micro-biology and has conducted research in bacteria. She explains how the meningococcus bacterium works. Health Services' Catherine Lounsbury is a physician and medical consultant. She says though there is cause for concern, meningitis is not as contagious as the flu.

Not an epidemic and may never be one, says Cupples

"Meningococcus bacterium, which causes meningitis, doesn't survive very long outside the human body. The cases we're hearing about now seem too widespread to be passed on from person to person. It's likely they developed meningitis independently. A fairly high percentage of people in society will carry the bacterium at any given time," said Claire Cupples.

"You pick up the bacterium from someone and it lives in you for a couple of weeks or months. During that time, you develop an immunity to it, unless you're one of the unlucky ones in which the bacterium becomes activated. While you have it in you, you pass it on to others.

"There are many strains of meningitis. We are hearing about the C strain in the news, for which there is a vaccine. Any given year, I think people will have either one strain or another. Like influenza, you see many cases of the Hong Kong flu one year, the Asian flu the next.

"My feeling is that this is not an epidemic and may never be one."

15% of the population carries the bacterium; we don't know why some get sick and some don't, says Lounsbury

"There is no cause for alarm at the University because there haven't been any reported cases in Montréal. It's normal for about 15 per cent of the population to carry the meningococcus bacterium that causes meningitis. But we don't know why some people get sick and other don't," said Catherine Lounsbury.

"Public health officials are relying on statistics to guide them and, although the numbers are not greater than last year, they are concerned because the cases have been clustered in certain areas. It is peculiar that teenagers and not small children are contracting it. Meningitis is not as contagious as the flu.

"The vaccine has an 80 per cent effective rate in protecting you against the disease, but it can take up to a week to become effective. It's practical to take the Rifampin antibiotic, which immediately kills the bacterium.

"The vaccine is good for a maximum of three years. What do you do after that? Do you vaccinate everybody again? How long does this go on for? It makes sense to vaccinate people in high risk areas and age groups, but people are being vaccinated now, partly because the population is demanding it, and not because there is an epidemic.

"The bacterium is spread through kissing, sharing drinks, sneezing and coughing. There is an incubation period of 10 days. If anyone thinks they've been in contact with someone who has meningitis, they should be examined immediately.

"Health Services doesn't have any vaccine but we can examine you for meningitis and prescribe Rifampin. If we can get the vaccine, and there is a call for it, we will alert the University community."

First Concordia congress on behavioural biology links scientists, language and research

Learning used to be domain of experimental psychology but more biologists are expanding into this area of research.

Biologists are not only interested in innate behaviour but in animal's use of acquired information

by Karl Jarosiewicz

How do starlings decide when they have collected enough insect larvae to return to their nests and feed their young? What happens when they have depleted the supply of food in their immediate area?

These may not be questions on most people's minds, but they are some of the issues that intrigue behavioural ecologists. Ultimately, they are aspects of ecological biology which help us understand the natural world.

Last November, the Société québécoise pour l'étude biologique du comportement (SQEBC) held a congress at Concordia for the first time in its 16-year history. Its chief organizer, Biology Department Professor Luc Giraldeau, said that several participants declared it the best animal behaviour meeting they had attended.

Forum for French-speaking scientists

The SQEBC is the only regional society devoted to this field. Although the Animal Behaviour Society encompasses most of North America and has chapters across the continent, the Québec branch provides a forum for French-speaking scientists to present papers and interact with their English-speaking counterparts.

All four Montréal universities support research centres in behavioural ecological research, making Montréal a significant centre for this type of work. Giraldeau noted that this congress will "put Concordia on the map," and bring about closer ties with other Québec universities.

Before completing his doctoral degree at McGill University, Giraldeau spent six months at Oxford University with John Cribbs, founder of behavioural ecology.

This is a relatively new field, Giraldeau said, which is still looking for its own footing. The theme of this year's congress was Behavioural Ecology of Learning, and while learning used to be the domain of experimental psychology, biologists are now expanding into this area of research.

Acquiring information from the environment

Zoologists, ecologists and other biologists are not only interested in innate behaviour. Their research indicates that animals acquire information from the environment and each other. They react to this new information and change their behavioural patterns, making the concept of learning important to the study of biology.

The 1992 SQEBC congress will be held at the Université du Québec à Montréal. The 1993 and 1994 meetings will be held in Rimouski and Trois-Rivières respectively. Giraldeau expects Concordia will host the congress again within the next eight years.

The organizing committee also included Biology Professors Daphne Fairbairn, Jim Grant and Ed Maly, as well as several graduate students who worked extensively on the congress. The congress was supported financially by the University, the Faculty of Arts and Science, the Department of Biology, and the National Science and Engineering Research Council (NSERC).

previous editions in as many years, the professor of Teaching English as a Second Language (TESL) has gone back to his Mac and produced a fourth edition of A.T.E.S.L. Job Guide.

The handbook has grown with each version. Now it comprises 142 pages of job-hunting strategies, government requirements, addresses of prospective employers, networking tips and worldly advice from the well-travelled professor on teaching English here and far away. Keeping the book current is a way of life.

"Every time I go to a conference in another country, I call up their government offices and find out what has changed," said Acheson. Former students also relay the latest information from wherever they have found work.

The handbook's growth parallels that of the TESL Centre itself. The Centre is unique in Canada, and proud of its challenging academic orientation. Offering three programmes (certificate, Bachelor of Education and Masters), it has seen a steady increase in applicants, and a rise in their qualifications well beyond the minimum requirements. Most current students have previous degrees.

Many students from outside Québec

The Centre's success has a lot to do with the character of Montréal, where nobody takes language for granted. A sizeable number of Concordia's TESL students come from other parts of Canada.

Graduate teachers of English may stay in Québec to teach francophones and immigrants, or they may use their TESL qualifications, as Acheson bluntly puts it, "as a ticket out."

The TESL job market in Québec, he admits, has "gone up and down," owing to the official priority of French for immigrants, and to francophone school boards' traditional unwillingness to hire anglophones, even as teachers of English. At the moment, however, it's buoyant. Acheson says

A T A GLANCE

by Donna Varrica

Concordia is a vibrant collection of people, places and activities. At-a-Glance is one vehicle for discovering some of what is happening here. This column welcomes your submissions.

- Sexual Harassment Officer Sally Spilhaus will be a participant in a Career Women's Network of the Women's Federation of Allied Jewish Community Services' panel discussion, titled "Sexual Harassment in the Workplace: In Search of Answers," to be held in February.
- Walter Kent Sloan, a retired professor of Theatre and Design at Concordia, died suddenly last November at his home in Toronto. Former students and colleagues who would like to make a donation in his memory may do so through the Canadian Diabetes Association, 234 Eglinton Ave. E., Suite 514, Toronto, M4P 1K5.
- Susan Parisella has been appointed as Bio-safety Officer in the Faculty of Arts and Science. She will be working in conjunction with the Environmental Health and Safety Office to develop a policy for the acquisition, handling, storage and disposal of biohazardous materials. Her appointment is particularly timely, as the Québec government will soon set stringent regulations in this area.
- Former Concert Hall manager Jane Needles has been given a six-month reassignment to oversee and improve the quality of life in the Henry F. Hall Building. Her projects will include improving signage, as well as the installation of a kiosk in the lobby of the building which will contain information about department location and directions. She plans to meet with all chairs of departments housed in the Hall Building to discuss their particular needs.
- Mechanical Engineering Professor Hugh McQueen will be honoured this year with the prestigious Humboldt Research Award for Scientific Co-operation between Canada and Germany. The award comes with a 50,000 DM ($35,000 Cdn.) prize and is in recognition of McQueen's past accomplishments in research and teaching. He will be allowed to stay in Germany for six months, beginning June 1, 1992, to carry out his research.
- In the Department of Sociology and Anthropology: Professor Danielle Gauvreau presented a paper, titled "Destins de femmes, destins de mères: Images et réalités historiques de la maternité au Québec," at the annual meeting of the Institut d'histoire d'Amérique française in Québec City last October; Professor Christine Jourdan was invited to present her paper "Where Have All the Cultures Gone? Sociocultural Creolization in the Solomon Islands" at a conference on the Global Pacific in Lund, Sweden in October; and, Professor Rosalind Zinman attended the 11th Biennial Conference of the Canadian Ethnic Studies Association in Winnipeg in October and was elected to its board of directors. Zinman will also direct a new research project for a two-year period. "A Study of the Academic and Psychological Assessment of Students within a Culturally Diverse Milieu" is being prepared for the Protestant School Board of Greater Montréal and is a joint project of the PSBGM Student Services and the Multicultural/Multiracial Education Services Department.
- Concordia's new Fire and Public Safety Officer Normand Lanthier comes to the University from Physical Resources at the Université du Québec à Montréal. He was assistant to the Deputy Fire Chief at the Westmount Fire Department and has had paramedic and emergency response training. He spent his first two weeks at Concordia in orientation with the Security Department.
- Ring the right number — the 1991-92 edition of the Universities Telephone Directory has just been released by the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada. It lists the names and numbers of more than 6,000 academics and senior university administrators at 89 university-level institutions in Canada. For a copy, order from AUCC Publications, 151 Slater St. in Ottawa, K1P 5N1 or by phoning (613) 563-1236, ext. 205. Faculty and staff can be invoiced for $18.14 per copy, including GST. VISA and MasterCard orders accepted.

Commerce Games '92: everyone came up a winner

'92 COMMERCE GAMES: When the totals were in, the best you can say from the hosts' point of view was that a good time was had by all. Concordia came in 11th in a field of 12, but the spirit of the event made everyone a winner. As reported last week in CTR, Université Laval came in first, Sherbrooke came in second and the Université du Québec à Montréal came in third. The École des hautes études commerciales came in fourth and McGill University came in seventh.

REAL EDUCATION FOR THE REAL WORLD

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The model for inclusive education should deal with curriculum not political society

✉ To the editor,

Deepak Awasti, a representative on the Arts and Science Faculty Council, published in the CONCORDIA'S Thursday Report on Nov. 14, 1991, a brief on reforming curricula at Concordia, seeking "recognition and comprehension...of all cultural and religious traditions." In particular:

The authors of the BNA Act of 1867 were (mildly) condemned for being "land-owning, white, heterosexual, Anglo-Saxon, Protestant males" with "outdated views on ethnicity, race, and religion, as well as gender, sexuality, and sexual orientation." It is not clear why Awasti suggests the BNA Act was not negotiated by French as well as English Canadians, and by Catholics as well as Protestants. Unusually, he did not mention the Constitution Act of 1982, which supersedes the 1867 Act in several important respects.

Awasti complains that "women, homosexuals and the members of ethnocultural communities, as well as the First Nations...have been led to believe that their cultural and religious traditions are an insignificant part of this society." He could say no less of other natural collectivities, such as the deaf or handicapped, but may not be aware how far his proposed solutions are embedded in philosophical conflicts between the two constitutions.

The 1867 (Anglo-Saxon) tradition is that constitutions define individual rights and the powers of government. Even though they may influence social thought, they disclaim any responsibility for directing it, or telling people what to think, right or wrong. In other words, the 1867 tradition (as belatedly amended by the Persons decision) guarantees women the same rights as men to have a complaint and demand its adjudication. But it is no business of the state what people feel, let alone judging them in any respect not covered by common or statute law.

New collective rights

The 1982 tradition is different, enshrining new collective rights that do not fit the older tradition of individual rights in all respects. As was predicted a decade ago, the doctrine of collective rights has led to a great deal of litigation, not all satisfactory, apparently because it offers to use the constitution as an agent of thought reform. Under the 1982 tradition, recognized collectivities can claim their agenda is a constitutional agenda, and the state has an interest in what they feel.

How far this can go (e.g., whether women or new immigrants should be a recognized collectivity, like native Indians) is a continuing political dispute. If Awasti wishes Concordia to build allegiance to one philosophy rather than another, he has made his case only in terms of political society into the curriculum, not yet in terms of the curriculum with which the Faculty Council deals.

In some minor respects, Awasti's evidence is weaker than one might have expected. In the special case of immigrants, he cites anglicizing names as evidence of their "inferiority complex." It is a peculiar point, because this practice has almost vanished.

Mother tongue

Citing statistics, he complains that "many second- and third-generation immigrant children...cannot communicate in their mother tongue." If so, they would be mute. "Mother tongue" is the language first learned, whether a Canadian official language or something else. If the intervenor wished to complain that third-generation Dutch-Canadians seldom know Dutch, this is not actually what he said. If Awasti wishes to suggest that immigrants from Japan are bad because they seldom maintain their language into the third generation, when many Chinese do so enthusiastically, other statistics will be needed than those that now exist.

Awasti described educational institutions and the media as "catalysts in the reform of contemporary Canadian culture." A catalyst is something which accelerates a change while itself remaining unchanged — the opposite of what Awasti seeks. He wants educational institutions and the media to change, to reflect changing times. If so, it is wrong to call them catalysts.

More generally, universities' "emphasis on the western world's history and culture, rather than those of the underdeveloped world" is condemned as "inequity in our educational system." This is a serious proposition that deserves a serious reply, within which is the plain fact that Concordia is a scholarly institution, working mainly from documents in English and secondly in French, and little of the history and culture of the underdeveloped world

- abandoned as the result of the acquisition of the downtown library complex and the Loyola High School building.
- b) The 10,300 square metres of space added to the University's inventory following the exchange of rented premises for owned properties has been allocated almost entirely to academic functions.
- c) The Faculty of Engineering and Computer Science has received a substantial increase (5,000 square metres) in space for teaching and research, and the provincial government has been made aware of the need for additional space for the Faculty.
- d) In recognition of student contributions to the last Capital Campaign, downtown facilities for CUSA Corp have been expanded and moved to the mezzanine of the Hall Building.
- In addition to improving the environment in which the Faculty of Engineering and Computer Science conducts its academic activities, the plan consolidates all pure science departments and groups together a number of academic departments and service units that have disciplinary or functional affinities. It also locates all expensive installations from abandoned rentals in appropriate space owned by the University. As a result, both the academic life and the efficiency of the University will be enhanced significantly by the first phase of what is anticipated to be a decade-long process.

Work will commence immediately on the implementation of the plan, with units scheduled to move during the period 1992-1994 being contacted to begin the designing of their facilities within the next few weeks.

Vice-Rector, Services

The schedule of this first group of moves is at right:

Acting Dean has long association with the Faculty

Communication Studies Professor Gail Valaskakis, who has been Acting Dean of the Faculty of Arts and Science since Jan. 1, 1992, has held numerous academic and administrative positions at Concordia.

In addition to her teaching duties in the Department of Communication Studies, she has been affiliated with the School of Community and Public Affairs, the programme in Canadian Studies, the MA Programme in Media Studies and the Simone de Beauvoir Institute. She also served as the Vice-Dean, Academic Planning, in the Faculty of Arts and Science between 1985 and 1990.

The U.S.-born academic has published numerous works on the subject of communication technology and native peoples in northern Canada and is a much sought-after expert on these matters.

She has also conducted research and carried out advisory consultation work for such bodies as the Departments of the Secretary of State and Indian and Northern Affairs (Ottawa), Inuit Tapirisat of Canada and the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation.

Valaskakis was educated at McGill University, Cornell University and the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

has been recorded in English and French. It is not a perpetual limitation, because many graduate scholars work in an international professional environment, and can bring material from other languages and cultures into Concordia's orbit. This is the normal way the scholarly world works. Academic institutions in Benin specialize in Benin and Africa, those in Benares specialize in Benares and Asia, and those in Québec specialize in Québec and the Western world. Professors and senior students meet and interact at international meetings. But no one suggests Benin and Benares and "inequitable" because their scholarly work is concentrated in African and Asian cultures.

European philosophers

The specific complaint about a Concordia course on the history of political theory is easy to deal with. If it is true that the course curriculum so concentrates on European philosophers so as to ignore "all other cultural, religious and philosophical viewpoints which may have influenced them," the course is academically unsound and can easily be corrected. The rules of the academic game are standardized and widely accepted. If I wish to prove that someone, say, Dingen, influenced someone else, say, Clemenceau or Stalin, the standards of evidence and canons of judgement are set by the profession, not by me as an individual, or you. The rules stand independently of what you or I hope to prove true, and scholars agree to obey the same rules, whether they get their druthers or not.

The final example, of AIDS research, is not clear at all. Awasti's initial complaints were about the mass media, which are not (I hope) principal sources for the Concordia curriculum. AIDS appears to be chiefly a medical problem; Concordia has no medical school. It is also a political and social phenomenon: so one can expect and may demand, as political and social science literature on AIDS becomes available, that will be evaluated and incorporated into the curricula of those disciplines.

Condoms and curriculum

But Awasti also describes "dispensation of condoms...as a necessary part of the educational process." So far as he is right, this applies no less to tuberculosis tests, infant immunization, and sound nutrition. Concordia offers a limited range of medical services and cafeteria food as part of its essential housekeeping, just as it makes income tax deductions from the payroll. But no one pretends the cafeteria or payroll deductions are part of the university curriculum, and the case has not yet been made that either condoms or "the sensitization of students through their...assiduous examination of...AIDS" is part of the curriculum. A good university also has art exhibitions, intercollegiate sports, T-shirt competitions and political and religious clubs, but no one supposes these are part of the curriculum or ought to be.

Photographer's travels take her to the reality of life

by Lynne Driscoll

Last summer, when Iva Zimova took the photograph on page one, her heart stopped. The Concordia Photography student went to Czechoslovakia to shoot gypsy settlements. She said "the man was drunk and didn't know I was there."

"When I clicked the shutter, I felt that it made such a loud noise that he would wake up."

She was lucky, he didn't wake up. But Zimova's stunning photographs may still not see the light of day, because she has been unable to exhibit her work in Montréal.

"Preparing for an exhibit takes a lot of energy and planning. I would like to exhibit through the Maisons de la culture network, but they are booked up," she said.

Hoping for funds

Instead, Zimova has concentrated her efforts on putting her gypsy photographs together to apply for a Canada Council grant. The money would enable her to go to Romania to photograph the Czech-speaking people of a small village who still live much as they did in the 19th century. She considers photographing them important, because one day their way of life may disappear.

"They speak Old Czech, and they run their farms with no technology. Their lives are simple and they don't need anybody."

Zimova can easily relate to the Czech-speaking Romanians, because she shares a similar approach to life.

"I like a simple life. I like my black-and-white television, and when it breaks down, I'll probably get another one just like it. For me, it's not very important to have a lot of things."

Zimova tries not to romanticize her subjects, and she avoided depicting the gypsies as carefree bohemians.

"A lot of the men are alcoholics. They don't plan for the future. They don't look for wood during the summer, so when winter comes and they have no wood to burn, they burn the furniture."

Zimova has travelled to various parts of the world to photograph people as she finds them.

"If you change or manipulate their environment, they are not themselves. I try to show the harsh reality of life."

NAMES IN THE NEWS

by Sharon Bishin

- The Public Relations Department subscribes to clipping and transcription services which monitor the media nationwide for items relating to Concordia. About 30 items a week are received with information about our faculty, students and staff.
- Bérengrère Gaudet, Secretary-General of Concordia, was profiled prominently in the magazine, Notaires d'aujourd'hui, at the beginning of November.
- Joe Smucker (Department of Sociology and Anthropology), who has done extensive research on labour market issues, was quoted recently in a Toronto Star article on skilled labour and the recession. The same newspaper reported that Journalism's Ross Perigoe is a co-founder of Tele-Canada News Inc., which produces a daily cable television news program beaming news about Canada to Canadians wintering in Florida.
- "Investment Climate in East Asia" was the title of a piece that appeared in Business Quarterly, which was co-written by Management's Kamal Argheyd.
- Exercise Science's S. John Sullivan and former Concordia librarian Elizabeth Winiarz wrote an article called "Discovering the Variety of Library Resources Through Bibliographic Instruction and an Assignment," which appeared in the Canadian Library Journal. The report outlined a method of instruction developed for the three-year BSc programme in Exercise Science.
- Interface highlighted Chemistry and Biochemistry Professor Raymond Le Van Mao and his work with catalysts.
- The Toronto Star came to Ron Rudin (History) for comments on Québec-Canada relations, while both the Globe and Mail and the Regina Leader Post cited Political Science's Harold Chorney in an article about Bank of Canada's decisions on the national monetary policy.
- The opinions of Marketing's Michel Laroche on the spending habits of single-parent families and dual-income families were featured in the Niagara Falls Review. Also in Marketing, Bryan Barbieri was quoted in both The Financial Post and The Gazette on network marketing and information transfer.
- The Moose Jaw Times-Herald recently profiled Richard Hancox's (Communication Studies) latest experimental film, Rick Hancox's Moose Jaw. Also cited in a western Canadian newspaper, Norma Joseph (Religion) was featured in a Calgary Herald article on feminist Jews.
- The Simone de Beauvoir Institute's Chantal Maillé received both print and radio coverage on her new book about women caregivers.
- La Presse profiled Guido Molinari (Painting and Drawing) in a long article about messages in art. The French-language daily also called on John Fiset (Institute of Co-operative Education) to comment in an article about students' low enrolment in the sciences.
- The creation of a joint Concordia/UQAM Chair in Intercultural, Ethnic and Race Relations Studies was covered in The Gazette, The Downtowner, La Presse and Le Devoir.
- Geography's Allan Nash's comments on the regional distribution of entrepreneurs appeared in an article in Le Devoir.
- Santé, a magazine on health issues, quoted Jean-Roch Laurence (Psychology) on hypnosis.
- "L'art de vivre au Québec," the Études françaises course developed by Professor Pascal Normand Truchon, received wide coverage in a variety of media.
- Radio and television interviews make up a good deal of the media coverage that we receive. Here's a sample: Roger Côté (Financial Aid) on student loans; Graeme Decarie (History) on Bill 178; Marc Gervais (Communication Studies) commenting on the movie The Black Robe; Bernice Goldsmith (Engineering) on the new "Product Life-Cycle Assessment" course; Arpi Hamalian (Education) on immigrants; Claudie Solar (Status of Women) on the new video about sexual and racial discrimination; Sally Spilhaus (Sexual Harassment Officer) on sexual harassment programmes; and Bernie Warren (Theatre) on Theatre 50-50.
- CBC radio producer Stuart Robertson is always on the lookout for interesting, articulate people who have offbeat hobbies or interests. Call me at 848-4884 if you'd like to contact him about an interview.

ANNUAL
90-91

For the first time in the history of Annual Giving, a Report to Donors has been produced for the 1990-91 campaign. The purpose of the Report is to further thank donors and volunteers, to inform individuals about the results of the campaign and to list the source of funds and to demonstrate their designation.

The Report contains a message from the general chair and Governor Dominic D'Alessandro (BSc '67). In it, he says, "Concordia University received $1,170,355 in private donations from 6,795 donors. Reconstituted in 1988 after the last Capital Campaign, Annual Giving has progressed rapidly during the last three years."

Please note that Kraft General Foods was inadvertently left off the Report's list of Matching Gift companies which support the Annual Giving programme.

This first report does not list the donations from Concordia's faculty and staff. In the past, anonymity had been requested by an internal community committee of the Capital Campaign. However, the University acknowledges and expresses its gratitude to the 408 faculty and staff members who contributed more than $86,000 to last year's campaign. Of that amount, more than $18,000 was collected through the first-ever Concordia Shuffle. In future, faculty and staff will be consulted through the appeal on the question of keeping gifts anonymous.

Case Competition is a family affair

The MBA case competition is a family affair for the Brunets.

Pierre is a Professor in the Department of Management, briefer of judges and self-described unofficial advisor to the three-student team organizing the big event. Daughter Louise, in her final MBA year, was one of those student organizers. And her brother Mark was a member of the team competing for Queen's University.

Both father and daughter steered clear of the Concordia team until it was all over.

"We make a point of keeping the administration of the event and the team absolutely separate," Pierre Brunet said. But that didn't mean he wasn't thrilled with the efforts of all those involved — his own children and his students competing for Concordia.

One of his most difficult jobs every year is to find seven brand-new cases for the teams to analyze. They have to be good, and they have to be unpublished, and those two don't often come together.

Range of disciplines

"We have to catch them after they're written and before they make it into a classroom or a book," said Brunet. They also have to cover a range of disciplines, such as marketing, finance and production, be about real companies, and reflect a broad range of current issues.

This year's cases included a health-oriented beauty products company called The Body Shop; a global courier, United Parcel Service; Hankin Management Services, which had a peculiarly Canadian component; and a U.S.-based pulp and paper company facing environmental problems.

The case with strong Canadian content fell by chance to two foreign teams. They were told that the Montréal company had moved to Toronto during the trauma of the late 1970s, but the nature of the trauma wasn't fully explained. Brunet had to do a little last-minute amplification.

"A member of the Otago team told me, 'We wondered who that bloke René Lévesque was.'"

Pierre Brunet's job at the competition itself, along with his colleague, Management Professor William Taylor, was to brief the groups of three judges about each case.

"We don't try to match the case to the judge; the case may or may not be in the judge's immediate area of expertise. We lead discussion, and try to get them to develop their ideas. We want them to go into each case at least on the same wavelength."

He said that this year's competition "was as smooth as silk," thanks to many months of preparation by the three-student team of organizers.

Kyle Harrison and Anne Fortin were the original organizers, and started back in March to plan this year's contest, but they soon realized they needed help, and Louise Brunet was brought on board. The three students, who earn credits toward their MBA by working on the mammoth event, worked all summer with growing intensity.

"By August, I had already put in the time required to earn my credits," Louise Brunet said with a laugh, but the work grew more furious than ever.

It's hard to find about 250 top business executives to be volunteer judges, not because they don't enjoy it, but because they're busy. "Some judges take several days off work to be part of it," she said. It was also hard at first to

Competition has grown immeasurably in 10 years

Robert de Fougères remembers when the Concordia MBA Case Competition was a very small affair.

"We had six teams and three judges," he reminisced, "and we held it in the [Henry F.] Hall Building. Even then, it was quite a job. We required typed as well as oral presentations, and getting the typing done was the hardest part."

That was 10 years ago. Now it's the mighty International MBA Case Competition, with a highrise hotel venue, entries this year from 19 Canadian and five foreign universities, and 255 volunteer judges from the business community.

It was an idea whose time had come. The brainchild of two Concordia students, Annette Wild and Nora Kelly, it was a local competition only in 1982; the following year saw enthusiastic participation by 16 business schools from across Canada.

De Fougères, owner of a holding company, is now the unofficial dean of judges, dispensing advice to the beginners. Judging the work of Master of Business Administration students is not an exact science.

"Judges are not always fast, not always right, and not always smart," he said. "There's no right answer. Some schools play it more by the book than others. Sometimes a team gets hold of a case, and scores a home run." That's when being a judge is really fun.

There's an 11-point spread between the pairs of teams, de Fougères explained, and interpretation can sometimes skew the results. "Some judges like to keep them fairly even, say, six to five, while others provide more contrast, like me. When I teach courses, as I still do, I don't balk at handing out a mark of 35. But some teachers would boost it up to 52."

The five-day tournament, which took place last week at the Château Champlain Hotel, is a round robin. Each team has four members. They compete in pairs, for a battery of three judges, and work their way up to the finals.

Why would 255 successful business people take time out of their busy lives to puzzle over other companies' business problems?

Easy, said de Fougères, "it reminds them of their days at business school, or, if they didn't go, it shows them what they missed. They really enjoy the connection with the University — and with Polytechnique and McGill. Its findings will be used in environmental science, aerodynamics, hydraulics and astrophysics. Until now, Canadian scientists have often had to use the resources of colleagues abroad to carry on their own research.

"But funds for American research are going down," said Habashi. "The Centre is going to give us an edge." Among other things "we want to sign an agreement with NASA and create international exchanges among scientists.

"I already have many relationships with industry," said Habashi, an aerodynamic consultant at Pratt & Whitney Canada Inc., where he directs a team of seven researchers. "So my role with CERCA will be very complementary."

Habashi also directs Concordia's Computational Fluid Dynamics Laboratory. CERCA researchers will develop software for scientific and industrial applications, organize symposiums and run training programs. Robillard said she hopes the Centre will generate $40 million in business during its first five years.

Alcan International, Bombardier-

Canadair, GE Canada, Pratt & Whitney and Spar Aerospace are already committed to providing research grants and contracts.

The universities involved will provide about 30 per cent of the cost of the Centre to ensure teaching and training. Concordia will appoint one CERCA professor in June and is committed to hiring two more. Industry will provide the equivalent of 40 per cent of the budget, while the Ministry of Higher Education and Science will subsidize the remaining 30 per cent.

CERCA will lease time from Environment Canada's supercomputer at Dorval, which is one of the fastest in the world. In addition, research centres in Toronto and the U.S. will co-operate with CERCA researchers to allow them to make the faster-than-lightning calculations needed for projects such as simulating the Atlantic Ocean to determine the influence of its thermal capacity on the greenhouse effect.

In five years, CERCA will boast the participation of 100 professors, research assistants, students, and partners in industry. The universities will create 15 new positions for professors.

"The government expects to see Québec acquire an expertise and specialized labour force in applied mathematics equal to that of its international competitors," Robillard said.

The site for CERCA has not yet been determined, but the Centre will begin operation on April 1.

- ◆ Student in the final year of an undergraduate engineering program
- ◆ Canadian citizen or landed immigrant and permanent resident of Québec

TO APPLY

Eligible students may apply through their academic institution by filling out the appropriate form accompanied by :

- ◆ a brief CV
- ◆ a transcript of their grades

Eligible students may apply themselves or be nominated by their colleagues or teachers.

Each application must be for only one individual.

SELECTION CRITERIA

Applications are analyzed according to the fundamental values of the engineering profession.

The student's academic record, personal conduct and commitment to serve the community are all taken into account.

SELECTION OF WINNERS

The jury for the university prize for excellence is formed by the academic institution. One member must be designated by the regional section of the OIQ in which the establishment is located.

The jury at each institution analyzes the applications and selects the winner.

DEADLINE FOR SUBMITTING APPLICATIONS

Applicants will be accepted until February 26, 1992.

Application forms are available from Claude Bédard, ing., Centre for building studies, room 357.

Political Science student says it's never too late to change the world

by Karl Jarosiewicz

Engineering programmes produce people who build, among other things, bridges, buildings and motors. Science programmes produce people who carry out research and cure diseases. But what kind of people do political science programmes produce?

Idealistic student

This question was foremost on the mind of Reuvin Carin, a undergraduate student in Political Science. It is, in itself, not an unusual question for the idealistic student, eager to change the world, to ask. In this case, what is unusual is the student himself.

Carin is 73 years old. He began attending university only a few years ago, but he is no novice at political discussion.

Self-described scourge of newspaper editors, and the bane of radio talk-show hosts, Carin is a well-known contributor to local and regional English-language broadcasts and publications — with the possible exception of former Alliance Québec head Royal Orr's call-in show on CJAD.

"I won't talk to him," said Carin. He refuses to recognize Alliance Québec, or anyone connected with the federally-funded lobby group. He does not consider it to be a legitimate representative of the English-speaking minority in Québec.

In 1977, he began what he describes as his "fight for human rights and freedoms" when he joined 'Freedom of Choice,' a group dedicated to fighting Bill 101.

Worked for Premier

Carin worked for Premier Robert Bourassa's election campaign in 1984, but resigned from the party after Bill 178 was passed. He felt it was a betrayal.

He fought against the Meech Lake Accord, because he felt it was demeaning to the Canadian people and contrary to the spirit of Confederation. Around this time, he became a member of the fledgling Equality Party, a group he believes is misrepresented by the anglophone press and misunderstood by the community at large.

Recently, Carin has become interested in the political process itself. He was a past vice-president of a federal Liberal constituency association. He said that party solidarity is a curse on democratic government. People elect agents of political parties that vote for and represent the will of the leadership of those parties, not the will of the people.

"People should and must have a voice, because interest groups are taking over," he said, "and the people we send [to parliament] are stooges, well-paid stooges. We should demand representation."

Reuvin Carin is a 73 year old undergraduate student in political Science at Concordia.

Carin is not the only person making these statements. Several political writers have released books recently that state the same case. They also make allegations of corruption, opportunism and greed.

Because he believes traditional parties are too moribund, Carin is working on a scheme to organize a student political group that would promote democratic ideals, and possibly run candidates in upcoming elections. Carin said he would even consider running for office himself.

Looking for people

For the moment, he is looking for a group of like-minded people to help organize a political party, using student participation as a springboard, and beginning at Concordia. He would like to see the participation of Political Science students.

Carin said we have a good system of government, but it has been misappropriated by interest groups and self-serving politicians who care only about re-election. What we need to keep our elected representatives in line are recall and impeachment procedures.

A true believer in referendums, Carin asked why we don't use these to gauge the will of the people. Quoting an article from the Economist, he said referendums are the way of the future and the instrument by which a mature society makes decisions.

Carin believes it is the responsibility of the academic world to motivate people to become instruments of change. He would like to see schools teach children how governments work and what citizens should expect governments to do.

"We are a politically illiterate country," said Carin. He asked, how many people can name their MNA or Member of Parliament? He wondered how many people are members of a political party, attend political meetings or call their representatives at any level of government?

"Throw the bums out," he said, referring to incumbent politicians who treat the electorate with contempt. It is time to show them what democracy is all about.

Learning a new language — without pain

Without a doubt, the most enjoyable way to learn a new language is total immersion in the culture of the country. When the country is Italy and the city is Florence, the learning environment is ideal.

Thirty lucky students do just that this June, when they study Italian in Florence.

Six levels of courses are offered, beginner to advanced, aimed at developing both oral and written skills. The Istituto Europeo is a private school located in the heart of Florence and attended by students from all over the world.

In addition to the courses in language and civilization, special weekend excursions are also planned. Tuition fees for the 80 hours of instruction are $590. This amount does not include air fare or accommodations. Participants should budget approximately $2,000 for the trip.

The minimum age requirement for participation is 18 years old. All students will be given a placement test on the first day to determine their level of instruction. The course runs for four weeks in June, from 8:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., Monday to Friday. Afternoons and weekends are free.

Deadline for registration is the first week of February. For more information, call Concordia student organizer Josée Di Sano at 482-1190.

Two Concordia debaters win individual speaker awards

Debating Society's two teams win first and second place in tournament

Last weekend, Concordia's Debating Society won both the first and second place team awards at the Royal Military College's Invitational Debating Tournament in Kingston, Ontario.

The winning team was Concordia's Z team comprised of John Bielby and Ken McMillan. The second place Concordia team was the A team comprised of Adam Brebner and Leslie Quinton.

Teams from McGill University, University of Western Ontario, Trent

University, the University of Waterloo, Ottawa University, Carleton University, as well as two American colleges, Bates and Colgate, participated in the tournament. A total of 41 two-person teams competed in five regular rounds of parliamentary debate.

In addition, two Concordia debaters won individual speaker awards — Adam Brebner placed second and Ken McMillan placed fourth.

that the school boards are hiring for adult evening classes, and Montréal's largest school board, the Commission des écoles catholiques de Montréal (CECM), is bowing to parental pressure and advertising for anglophone English teachers.

Jobs for TESL teachers will proliferate in Québec, Acheson predicts, as francophones hear less English at work and their children continue to be barred from English-language schools.

Although Montréal has a wealth of private language schools, Acheson takes a dim view of them. Not only are many of their operators blithely ignorant of the subject matter, but they may charge as much as $50 an hour to the student and pay the teacher as little as $10 an hour.

Crime rings masquerading as schools can be downright dangerous. Acheson knows of one suspicious-sounding recruiter who hires only tall, blond, blue-eyed female "teachers," mainly through the classified ads.

Great demand for teachers

Qualified teachers of English are much in demand in the major cities of English-speaking Canada and the United States to teach immigrants, and Acheson says that some of his bilingual graduates have easily transferred their TESL skills to teaching French immersion, which is still trendy in Western Canada and Ontario.

The real image of TESL, though, is the teacher as gypsy, living with the locals in a foreign country, learning their language and experiencing life.

Acheson understands the romantic image — he has visited (and in many cases, worked in) an astonishing 63 countries — but he's hardheaded about the exigencies of teaching in a foreign country. Pollution, exploitation of women and children, terrorists, low pay (or nothing to spend excess income on) and the delicacy of cultural differences are among the hazards. "Examine your motives for wanting to travel and live abroad" is his guidebook's advice.

Asian countries, especially Japan, are the best source of foreign jobs for TESL graduates. The pay is good and the culture is fascinating. Acheson's own daughter is teaching there at the moment.

Became a teacher by accident

Acheson himself more or less fell into TESL. A restless student in the 1960s, he dropped out of his English university and hitchhiked around Europe. One of his drivers, a wealthy German, took him home to tutor his son in English.

"The boy's mother was so nervous about this young foreigner that she wouldn't let me stay in the house, so the father drove me back and forth to the local youth hostel in his Mercedes Benz," Acheson recalled.

It was the beginning of a career which has included years of adventurous travel, the acquisition of 10 languages (including some Arabic, Mandarin and Japanese), and a doctorate. His work in second language acquisition research, a relatively new field, is cited. Not bad for a dropout.

A T.E.S.L. Job Guide costs $15 and may be purchased at the TESL Centre, 2155 Guy St., Suite 601.

Co-host,
CBC's the fifth estate

Hana Gartner graduated from the class of '70 into a class of her own.

You don't become an award-winning broadcast journalist overnight. Hana Gartner, co-host of CBC's the fifth estate, began her rise to the top at Concordia University. Because, according to Hana, "a successful, rewarding career is the result of more than just hard work and talent. It also comes from attending the right university."

And there are many other valid reasons Concordia is the right university for so many people: faculties and programmes with strong reputations in business studies, communications, psychology, fine arts and engineering; a college system offering a personalized approach to education; a friendly atmosphere, with professors who are known for their accessibility; a remarkable flexibility in the choice of programmes on a full- and part-time basis; and two campuses with a student body truly representative of Montréal's diverse population.

When you consider that Concordia is also known for being in touch with the real world, you can be assured that what you'll learn here will go farther out there.

persuade foreign teams to participate, because they hadn't heard of the Concordia event. The first overseas acceptance was from the New Zealand team which ultimately won.

She finished the competition with her six credits and a sore throat from incessant talking, but she said she'll never forget the things she learned about making an international competition run like clockwork.

Lilian Lacanor has been a student volunteer at the competition in every year of her three-year programme. This year she looked after the visiting team from the London Business School. Officially, she's called a team co-ordinator.

"I have to make sure they obey the rules during the competition. But I also get to take them around and answer their questions. This is the first time their school has competed, so they're sort of guinea pigs for their school."

As a veteran observer, she was able to tell them to stand their ground when the judges cross-examined them, and not to admit to a weakness in their case.

It wasn't enough to save them from defeat in the first round, which lost Lilian a bet (a McDonald's breakfast) against a pal who was co-ordinator for the winning team, but she's sure the Londoners enjoyed Montréal.

"They seemed to know all about the Peel Pub even before they got here," she mused. — BB prizes ($2,000 each). The scholarships are donated by the Bank of Montréal, Alcan, Pratt and Whitney and the MBA Association of Québec.

The other overseas teams were from Gothenburg University (Sweden), the London Business School, and Ohio State University.

Concordia's team has reason to be pleased with its performance. The members came fifth overall, behind the money-winners and fourth-place University of Saskatchewan, and beat every team they played in the round-robin tournament, except Otago.

For the second year in a row, Concordia was the top Québec team competing, going head-to-head against McGill, the École des hautes études commerciales and UQAM (the Université de Québec à Montréal).

The Otago team was clearly made of the right stuff, according to many observers. The members were older and more experienced than many of their competitors, and it showed.

"The Otago team covered everything," said Louise Brunet, one of the three organizers. "They never left anything out, and always had a specific answer. They were very self-confident, convinced they were right." The New Zealand team included a seasoned sheep farmer and a stockbroker with wide European experience.

Management Professor Pierre Brunet, an advisor to the competition, said Otago "had a whole different way of looking at the seriousness of business. They aren't married to a solution, the way we sometimes are. They're more relaxed and flexible."

Historically, he said, the North American approach to a Master of Business Administration is to learn your formulae, get your credits and get out, whereas the Europeans are inclined to sit at the feet of the masters, absorb their wisdom, and graduate when they're considered to be ready. It's a fine distinction, but it produces two different styles.

The University of Gothenburg, Sweden, has participated in exchange programmes with Concordia's Faculty of Commerce and Administration over the past several years, but like the other non-Canadian teams, were competing in the case competition for the first time. They had a double challenge: competing in a foreign language (English) and having their first, harrowing taste of the three-hour preparation period. Their first round was a disaster, but they were fast learners, Louise Brunet said.

"They lost their first round, 3-8. But they only lost their second 5-6, and after that they started winning: 6-5, 7-4, 8-3. They just kept getting better, and couldn't believe how much they learned."

The competition is taking on a new intensity. Louise Brunet said that this year, one university even sent next year's team, just to watch and take notes.

Pierre Brunet admitted that in some respects, the competition is "not a level playing field." Memorial University, whose crack teams have won for the past two years, "attracts everybody in Newfoundland who wants to do an MBA." Mature business people studying at Concordia are more likely to be in the Executive MBA programme, "which would probably make it to the finals easily if they were eligible." But it's a great learning experience for the MBA students, and the ones who compete are the cream of the crop.

Best four students picked for team

Twelve Concordia students are accepted every year into a three-credit course for preparation for the event, and the top four are chosen for the team.

The members this year were Ayla As-sioun, who has a Computer Science degree from the American University in Paris, is fluent in four languages and has worked in the software industry; Helen Kotsovos, who has a Bachelor of Commerce from McGill and has worked in European corporate banking; Jonathan Mosel, who graduated in Commerce from Concordia and has worked in a big local department store; and Laura Crozier, who has a degree in English from the University of Toronto and won a financial analysts' society award last year.

Their coaches were Jan Meyers and Henri Colas, both executives-in-residence in the Management Department.

Louise Brunet said the Concordia team performed well, and the effect of the foreign teams on the Canadians was to galvanize their ambition.

"By winning, the Otago team created a situation where next year the Canadians will want to win back the title. It opened the whole thing up, in many different ways."

The Ordre des ingénieurs du Québec annually awards the Krashinsky Fellowship to an engineering student who, in addition to having an excellent academic record, has a distinguished record of social commitment, one of OIQ's fundamental values.

AMOUNT OF THE FELLOWSHIP

5 000 $

ELIGIBILITY

- ◆ A student completing the next to the last year of the regular engineering program at one of Quebec's academic institutions
- ◆ A permanent resident of Québec

TO APPLY

Eligible students may apply through their academic institution by filling out the appropriate form accompanied by:

- ◆ a brief CV
- ◆ a transcript of their grades
- ◆ an essay a maximum of 500 words long on "engineers and their social responsibilities"

A jury at each of the academic institutions makes a pre-selection and submits one application to the OIQ no later than March 31.

SELECTION CRITERIA

Each application is judged by the universities and the OIQ primarily on the basis of the student's commitment to the community but also on the essay and academic record.

SELECTION OF WINNER

The jury, consisting of five members appointed by the Bureau of the OIQ, selects the recipient of the fellowship from among those applications submitted by the universities.

DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS

Applicants will be accepted until February 26, 1992.

Application forms are available from Claude Bédard, ing., Centre for building studies, room 357.

other judges. A lot of networking goes on."

"Recruiting goes on here, too," added Management Professor Pierre Brunet. "A few years ago, Air Canada representatives came, waited until it was over, and then hired two members of the winning team." Brunet was keeping one eye on the Concordia students and another on his son, who was competing for Queen's University.

Women started the case competition in 1982, and are holding their own, especially at Concordia. Women represented one-third of the 96 students competing overall this year, but three of four members of the Concordia team were women. Brunet said that's because in Concordia's programme, proportionately more women students are strongly focussed on success.

COUNSELLING & DEVELOPMENT

Careers Library

DO YOU KNOW? Do you know where to find the answers to these questions? Where to locate university calendars worldwide? How to prepare for an employment interview? Where to apply for private sources of financial aid? How to study? How to determine which universities offer particular educational programs? Where to find information on occupational options and career planning? Come to the Careers Library (Student Services) and find the answers. Location: H-440, Henry F. Hall Bldg., 1455 de Maisonneuve Blvd. W. 848-3556 and 2490 West Broadway, 848-3555.

Counselling and Development

When Registering for or changing courses, also register for the many group Programs or Workshops available at Student Services - Counselling and Development. Our brochure gives you the description, times and dates of these helpful and interesting programs. You can register on the spot or take the brochure home and see what fits your timetable. Better grades, help with coping with personal issues or simply meeting new and interesting people may be only a registration away. Drop by the Counselling and Development Office at either campus and see what's waiting for you.
